Technology & Learning Magazine's 2009 Awards of Excellence Honors Intellislate®

MONTGOMERYVILLE, PA – October 28, 2009 – Numonics Corporation announces that the Intellislate has been recognized by Technology & Learning's 2009 Awards of Excellence.

The program, now in its 27th year, honors the top educational technology products. The magazine utilizes a 30-judge panel that extensively tests all the entries and looks for the best or most innovative products available. This year, the Intellislate is one of 65 winners, a field that includes a variety of hardware, software, network and Web-based learning tools.

"This year's awards have grown to include new hardware and network categories," said Editorial Director, Kevin Hogan for Technology & Learning Group. "Our judges put dozens of entries through their paces and to come out with their seal of approval is a testament to the product."

Intellislate is a lightweight cordless portable presentation device that replaces a mouse and gives the user total remote control of a connected computer system via RF Wireless technology. It connects into any USB port on the computer and uses a standard data projector to project all programs onto a wall, a screen or an interactive whiteboard. Intellislate also features unique softkeys for launching applications, presentation effects and multimedia controls.

“This award is a great honor,” said Numonics Chairman & CEO Alfred N. Basilicato. “It reflects our ongoing commitment to provide easy-to-use presentation products so teachers and students can benefit by focusing on the learning and not the technology. The Intellislate gives teachers the freedom to roam the classroom while navigating their computer and communicating with their students”.
